

Rain Gardens and Bioretention

A shallow depression planted with native and adapted plant that collect rain water runoff from roofs, parking lots, and other surfaces.

Rain Gardens: typically smaller in size and are not designed with an underdrain; used at homes or for small drainage areas.

Bioretention: typically has engineered features including an underdrain and overflow structure, used in commercial settings or larger drainage areas.

