

4-H Tech Changemakers Overview and Intern Job Description

The 4-H Tech Changemakers (TCM) program uses a teens-as-teachers approach with teen leaders learning digital skills to teach them to adults. Through this process, the teens will become certified Tech Changemakers and work in partnership with their 4-H educator to use turnkey 'grab n' go' lesson plans to teach digital skills to adults in the community. The lesson plans will focus on digital skills that help drive economic opportunity.

In addition to harnessing their digital knowledge for teaching, youth will use their compelling voice and long-standing relationships within their communities to engage local stakeholders and policymakers to educate them on their projects and the importance of closing the digital divide.

Collectively over the next year, Tech Changemakers across the country will reach 40,000-50,000 rural adults with digital literacy skills enabling them to achieve greater economic opportunity. Furthermore, through the TCM program, 4-H teens will learn how to engage community stakeholders, teach digital skills classes, and work with underserved populations in their communities including Hispanic/Latino, Black/African American, and the Native American, and Alaskan Native communities.
